The battering ram With heavy slam Makes head; the foe press on: bold Waltheof stands Within the breach--deals death with his own hands; In vain! For bribed by Norman gold, the Dane Is seen with lessening sails retiring o'er the main! O Roman Bar, call'd Micklegate, With turrets dight, embattled fine, Which age doth decorate! Thine arch above, a shield doth shine Ordericus Vitalis. (Where golden colours richly dance Midst thy huge pile), Bearing the arms of England and of France! In order file The great events, pictured to the mind's eye, Of thy wild history. Nor easily from thee turns our gaze away: --Those arms would say Us twain between, Friendship hath been Unbroken as thy silvery stripe of sea Encircling freedom's throne--long may it be! Such love-tween sisters should by nature last; Both peoples were made foes--forgive--forget...
