Do you know him? Yes. And his family? No. Ahsen lives alone in Lahore and loves his university classmate Mehwish. She hasn't yet met any of his family members, and before taking her relationship with him to the next level, she wants to know why exactly he avoids talking about his family. Ahsen, I've some vague-headed questions. I want to ask you something, she said. Her pleasing, soil-ploughing voice softened my soil. She had that ploughing power. I hope you don't mind. Vague headed? What's so big that you think I would mind? I responded. It is neither big nor wrong. Only, I don't know how you'll take it, she said. You can ask me anything. You don't need permission. You've complete freedom to play with me the way you want, I said, giving her an open field. In the beginning, all say so. Let's see what space you give me to play in. Two things are two because they are two. Different. And, I'm different, more different than the different, I said, showing her my variance. But she saw no difference. You love yourself too much, don't you? she said. No, I love you. Anyway, what are your vague-headed questions? I asked. I want to. I want to know everything about you. Before we take it to the next stage, she said, her eyes helping her lips pronounce the hard-to-articulate words. Her emphasis was on everything. I saw hundreds of questions swimming in her eyes. All baby doubts. I started laughing, to relax the air between us. Everything.? I...
