Excerpt: .beings are, from all the changes and temptations of life, there will be as little opportunity to test their characters and try their hearts.--And the world of woe, a place from which all salutary restraint and good influences are withdrawn, will be no better adapted to the purposes of trial, than heaven. This obviously is the place, from the very adaptation of it, where sinners are left to curse their God and look upward--left to fill up unchecked the measure of their sins--where they will bite and gnaw their tongues for pain, and yet not repent of their evil deeds. If there was to be a probation beyond the grave for any portion of mankind, we might expect that some place would be prepared and fitted, as this world is, for such a purpose. But we hear of no such place, on the other...
